

a. The client-server relationship is a model where a client, typically a user's device, requests service or resources from a server, which fulfills those requests and manages resources.

b. Servers are crucial in the current technological era as they centralize data, facilitate communication, and provide services, enabling efficient resource management, scalability, and collaboration in various applications and systems.